Additional Considerations:

1

Menstrual cups form a seal against the vaginal walls which prevent leaks and keep it in place. They can be used along with an IUD, but there is a chance that the IUD may become dislodged while removing the cup. If this occurs, a new IUD must be re-inserted by a healthcare provider. Reusable cups can last up to 10 years with proper care.

2

Menstrual discs sit just below the cervix and can be worn during penetrative sex but are not a form of birth control. They have been shown to hold more fluid than cups or tampons, making them a good choice for a heavy flow.

3

Tampons are available with or without an applicator to assist with insertion/positioning inside the vagina.

4

Period Underwear are also useful for urine leakage (incontinence) or post-partum flow. They come in a variety of styles including shorts and swimwear.
