Executive Summary

On behalf of the Minister, Environment and Climate Change Canada (ECCC) and Parks Canada conducted a review of the environmental fines and sentencing provisions under ten federal environmental Acts (the Review) 10 years after the provisions were adopted. The Review was mandated by law, which also required the Minister of Environment and Climate Change to table this report in both Houses of Parliament.

The purpose of the Review was to evaluate whether the fine amounts and sentencing principles in the ten Acts (the Review Acts) advance the goals of the regime and remain consistent with the public values, as well as economic and other circumstances. The Review looked at the three elements of the fines and sentencing regime: the fundamental purposes of sentencing (e.g. deterrence and denunciation), the sentencing regime itself (e.g. fines, sentencing principles, and aggravating factors), and ancillary clauses (e.g. absolute or conditional discharges, the due diligence defence, limitation periods, injunctions, and jurisdictional issues). It considered whether these provisions continue to advance the goals set out in the Acts; that is, deterrence against committing offences, denunciation of unlawful conduct, application of the polluter pays principle, and recovery and restoration, as the case may be in each Act (the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing) and whether the regime as a whole remains consistent with public values, as well as economic and other circumstances. The Review was not meant to review the enforcement activities of ECCC and Parks Canada or to result in any definitive proposal for law reform.

The Review included desk research and analysis, and incorporates results from both internal, as well as external engagement efforts. In spite of changes in the context, such as the relationship Canadians have with the environment and climate change, the relationship between Indigenous Peoples and all Canadians and efforts to promote reconciliation, the concern for environmental justice, and the economic landscape in Canada, the fines and sentencing regimes remain consistent with public values, as well as economic and other circumstances. While there is great variation in the fines, the highest fines imposed by courts under the Review Acts are much higher (several in the millions) than the highest fine imposed under the Acts prior to when the provisions were adopted ($100,000). The Review also found that the fundamental purposes of sentencing remain relevant, minimum fines for environmental offences are important because they provide clear legislated goal posts to courts of the seriousness of environmental offences, the fine ranges allow for appropriate flexibility, and the Acts have a comprehensive list of non-fine sentencing orders and aggravating factors, which are key to environmental sentencing.

A number of concepts were identified as areas that may be further explored, researched and consulted upon in the event there is an opportunity for legislative reform in the future. For example: further categorizing offenders for sentencing purposes to include other legal entities, such as limited liability partnerships, municipalities, very large corporate offenders; formally prioritizing deterrence among the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing; and adjusting the fine ranges to reflect inflation. The Review also highlights trends in environmental sentencing that may impact the Review Sections in the future.

1. The Review

1.1 Background and Scope of Review

Fueled by a growing understanding of the extent and severity of the damage caused by environmental wrongdoing and increasing demand for more severe penalties and fines for infractions, in 2010, the Environmental Enforcement Act¹ (EEA) strengthened Canada's environmental enforcement regime. Prior to the EEA, the fine structure of many of Canada's environmental laws had remained unchanged for over 20 years, and did not reflect inflation. Moreover, fines imposed by courts for environmental wrongdoing often ceased to serve as strong deterrents or to denounce environmental infractions, so much so that some corporate offenders considered low fines to be a "cost of doing business". The EEA modernized the fine regimes by establishing minimum penalties and increasing maximum penalties for environmental offences and providing for different fine amounts for individuals, corporations, other persons and vessels. It also enhanced sentencing guidance to courts and created an administrative monetary penalties framework for environmental violations.

The EEA also added a requirement to conduct a review every 10 years of specific provisions related to fines and sentencing in each of the nine Acts amended by the EEA (the Review Sections). Although the Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act² came into force after the EEA, Part 2 of this Act contains the same review requirement as the EEA and so it is included in this Review. The following ten Acts (the Review Acts) are therefore part of this review:

- *Antarctic Environmental Protection Act*³ (AEPA);
- *Canada National Marine Conservation Areas Act*⁴ (CNMCAA);
- *Canada National Parks Act*⁵ (CNPA);
- *Canada Wildlife Act*⁶ (CWA);
- *Canada Environmental Protection Act, 1999*⁷ (CEPA);
- *International River Improvements Act*⁸ (IRIA);
- *Migratory Birds Convention Act, 1994*⁹ (MBCA);
- *Saguenay-St. Lawrence Marine Park Act*¹⁰ (SSLMPA);

¹ Environmental Enforcement Act, SC 2009, c 14 [EEA].

² Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act, SC 2018, c 12 [GGPPA].

³ Antarctic Environmental Protection Act, SC 2003, c 20 [AEPA].

⁴ Canada National Marine Conservation Areas Act, SC 2002, c 18 [CNMCAA].

⁵ Canada National Parks Act, SC 2000, c 32 [CNPA].

⁶ Canada Wildlife Act, RSC 1985, c W-9 [CWA].

⁷ Canada Environmental Protection Act, 1999, SC 1999, c 33 [CEPA].

⁸ International River Improvements Act, RSC, 1985, c I-20 [IRIA].

⁹ Migratory Birds Convention Act, 1994, SC 1994, c 22 [MBCA].

¹⁰ Saguenay-St. Lawrence Marine Park Act, SC 1997, c 37 [SSLMPA].

- *Wild Animal and Plant Protection and Regulation of International and Interprovincial Trade Act*¹¹ (WAPPRIITA); and
- Greenhouse Gas Pollution Pricing Act (GGPPA).

Two important Federal Acts were not included in amendments set out in the EEA and, as such, they are not part of this Review: the *Species at Risk Act*¹² (SARA) and the *Fisheries Act*¹³.

The Review Sections and the section that mandates the review in each Review Act are listed in Annex 1. Annex 2 sets out a copy of the text of the Review Sections of each of the Review Acts. Only the Review Sections are in the scope of this Review.

For context, the regulatory toolbox outlined in the Acts includes a spectrum of enforcement responses, as depicted in Figure 1 below. However, the Review Sections focus only on one end of the spectrum—charges—as shown by the red circle. Within the “charge” end of the spectrum, the Review scope is limited to the sentencing stage. The Review did not explore whether the Review Acts and Review Sections are being effectively enforced, nor was it a functional or operational review of enforcement activities by ECCC and Parks Canada. Nonetheless, comments on broader enforcement matters beyond fines and sentencing provisions were welcomed as part of the engagement process. Finally, it is important to note that the Review was not created or designed to result in any decisive proposal for law reform.

1.2 Research and Methodology

To evaluate whether the fines and sentencing regime still advance all relevant goals and remain consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances, input was gathered through external engagement efforts, as set out in Annex 3, in conjunction with desk research (e.g. academic journals, case law, comparison of environmental sentencing guidelines, enforcement data, and legislation from other jurisdictions both domestically and internationally), and data obtained from the enforcement branches of ECCC and Parks Canada.

Data Limitations

Three main data limitations were found during the Review. The first was that there are very few reported sentencing cases for offences under the Review Acts. Second, external engagement efforts elicited limited results. Third, the data obtained related to fines and sentencing under the Review Acts had significant limitations arising from the short time frame of the EEA amendments, changes in databases, and inevitable human error. Furthermore, the timeline of the coming into force of the EEA is particularly relevant to the Review.

¹¹ Wild Animal and Plant Protection and Regulation of International and Interprovincial Trade Act, SC 1992, c 52 [WAPPRIITA].

¹² Species at Risk Act, SC 2002, c 29 [SARA].

¹³ Fisheries Act, RSC 1985, c F-14.

The EEA was introduced on March 4, 2009, received Royal Assent on June 18, 2009, and came into force in three stages:

- on December 10, 2010, the bulk of the EEA came into force (other than s. 47(2) and ss. 48, 72-80, 87, 88, 101, 121-123 and 127);
- on June 22, 2012, the provisions creating a new penalty regime under CEPA and a regulation completing that penalty regime came into force (ss. 72-80, 87 and 88); and
- on July 12 2017, the penalty regimes of the wildlife statutes amended by the EEA and the regulations completing these penalty regimes came into force (s. 47(2) and ss. 48, 101, 102, and 121-123).

Therefore, not all Review Acts have the same lifespan as others. This is particularly important for data for the CWA, MBCA and WAPPRIITA. The amendments set out in the EEA came into force for these Acts in 2017 (and not in 2012 as with CEPA, for example). Thus, the data that relates to the amendments ensuing from the EEA are only for three years, and not ten as envisioned by legislative review.

Moreover, and most importantly, ECCC (including Environmental Damages Fund, or EDF) and Parks Canada all changed their internal databases in 2015. Consequently, depending on the department or agency, significant changes on how and what was reported differs from previous years. In the case of Parks Canada, for example, only data collected since 2015 was available for the Review. In addition, departments and agencies account differently due to internal policies and practices mandated by different information management needs.

As with any database, the data therein is susceptible to human error in internal data recording practices. Furthermore, the data herein was compiled on a yearly basis and is based on sentencing dates. The reason for doing so is to provide an order of magnitude. However, as the time span between investigations, prosecutions and verdicts can take multiple years, the data may include sentences that derive from previous versions of the Review Acts.

Finally, any differences between the Discussion Paper Regarding the Environmental Fines and Sentencing Regime, published on June 16, 2021, and this Final Report are the result of further research and clarification efforts. The results set out in this Final Report prevail.

Key Changes in the Last Decade

Four key changes over the last decade were identified in the global and national context that may impact the fines and sentencing regime. These are changes related to: (1) the relationship Canadians have with the environment and climate change; (2) the relationship between Indigenous Peoples and all Canadians and efforts to promote reconciliation; (3) the concern for environmental justice; and (4) the economic landscape in Canada. Section 5 sets out a summary of the relevant evidence gathered to support this view.

The Research Questions

The provisions subject to the Review can be divided into three bundles related to the fundamental purposes of sentencing (e.g. deterrence and denunciation), the sentencing regime itself (e.g. fines, sentencing principles, and aggravating factors), and ancillary clauses (e.g. absolute or conditional discharges, the due diligence defence, limitation periods, injunctions, and jurisdictional issues). When the Bill proposing the EEA was tabled in Parliament, supporting documentation considered during the House of Commons and Senate committees review indicated that the underlying intent of mandating a review of these provisions every 10 years was “to ensure fine amounts and principles remain consistent with public values, the economy and other circumstances.”¹⁴ The three main research questions integrate this underlying intent:

1. Are the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances?
2. Is the Sentencing Regime consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances to advance the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing?
3. Are the Ancillary Clauses consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances?

The Report answers these questions, while acknowledging that the questions were open-ended and had the potential to attract a wide range of subjective responses.

1.3 Organization

This paper has seven sections. It begins with the background of the EEA and describes the scope of the Review, its methodology, and organization. The second section presents the historical context that led to the adoption of the EEA. The third section provides a snapshot of the relevant enforcement data. The fourth section summarizes the messages heard during external engagement. The fifth section outlines key changes in the global and national context over the last decade. Section six summarizes the key findings on whether the Review Sections still reflect public values, as well as economic and other considerations on the fines and sentencing regime of the Review Acts. The seventh and last section, concludes with final comments on the Review.

2. The EEA

One of the main objectives of the EEA was the modernization of the fines and sentencing regime for environmental offences. The trigger was the growing understanding of the extent and severity of the damages that could be caused by environmental offences. The underlying consideration was that the objectives of deterrence and denunciation would be better met if court-imposed fines were high enough so that contraventions would not be considered merely costs of doing business. Thus, the EEA amendments created a fine regime that included new minimum fines and increased maximum fines. The EEA also introduced new sentencing provisions, which codified the fundamental purpose of sentencing for each Act, introduced a stronger set of sentencing principles and listed aggravating factors that must be considered by the court when determining the fine amount. It also enhanced the toolkit available to enforcement officers, including expanded use of compliance orders, created a new legislative framework for administrative monetary penalties (AMPs) and a new public registry of corporate offenders. These provisions aimed to provide courts with “goal posts” to impose higher fines and sentences that reflected the seriousness of offences.

The fine regime and prosecutorial landscape of the Review Acts, as it existed prior to the enactment of the EEA, provide a helpful context underlying the rationale for the amendments made to the EEA. For example, CEPA, AEPA, and the MBCA had the highest fines, which were $1 million for offences where the Crown proceeded by indictment, or $300,000 where the Crown proceeded summarily. Other Acts, such as the IRIA, provided for maximum fines of $5,000 when by indictment or $500, when summarily convicted.¹⁵ In the five years preceding the EEA (2003 to 2008), there were 656 prosecutions under the Review Acts, and 502 sentences or convictions.¹⁶ Under CEPA there were 81 cases, under MBCA there were 246, and under WAPPRIITA there were also 136.¹⁷ Furthermore, at the time, a court had never imposed the maximum fines established under CEPA; the highest fine ordered under any of the Review Acts was under WAPPRIITA and it was for $100,000.¹⁸

3. The Review Acts

3.1 The Review Acts Today—Charges & Environmental Damages Fund

Turning to the Acts and the enforcement data, Figure 2 below sets out the number of charges per year from 2014 to 2019 as reported by the Public Prosecution Service Canada (PPSC). The total number of charges for five of the Review Acts (CEPA, MBCA, WAPPRIITA, CNPA, and CWA) is 3,541.

¹⁶ Ibid (“[i]n the past five years, there were 656 prosecutions, of which 479 cases culminated in convictions. In all, there were 502 sentences or convictions. The figures do not match because often, in the same prosecution, there may be two convictions, but that gives you an idea of the number of prosecutions that ended up before the courts in the past five years. ...the most important acts as far as charges are concerned are the Wild Animal and Plant Protection and Regulation of International and Interprovincial Trade Act and the Migratory Birds Convention Act, 1994. Of the 502 cases I mentioned awhile ago, 136 are related to the first act, 246 to the second one, and 81 to CEPA”).

¹⁸ Ibid (Cynthia Wright) (“[t]he biggest fine ever collected was $100,000”).

All Review Acts have a provision that states that all fines, other than those collected under the *Contraventions Act*¹⁹, are to be credited to the EDF.²⁰

3.2 CEPA

The total amount of fines issued under CEPA from 2010 to 2020 is $10,726,186, in addition to the fines issued in the Volkswagen Case of $196,500,000, for a total of $207,226,186. Below, Figure 3 shows the total fines per year issued under CEPA. The Volkswagen Case has been excluded for current purposes given the data in the figure becomes skewed by its high value.

Under CEPA, 7.4% of all fines were less than $5,000, and 8.1% of fines were equal to $5,000, for a total of 15.5% of all fines issued were equal to $5,000 or less. On the high end of the spectrum, 5.4% of all fines were equal to $100,000, and 18.2% of fines were more than $100,000, for a total of 23.6% of all fines issued were equal to $100,000 or more.

The top ten highest fines issued under CEPA are set out in Table 1. Considering that prior to the coming into force of the EEA, the highest fine under CEPA was for $75,000, the table below shows the significant increase in fines in the past 10 years.

3.3 Wildlife—CWA, WAPPRIITA, and MBCA

Turning to the wildlife-related Review Acts, the total amount of fines charged under CWA, WAPPRIITA, and MBCA from 2009 to 2020 is $5,583,975. There was an expressive peak in 2018, as per the Syncrude Case set out below, and a sharp decline in 2020.

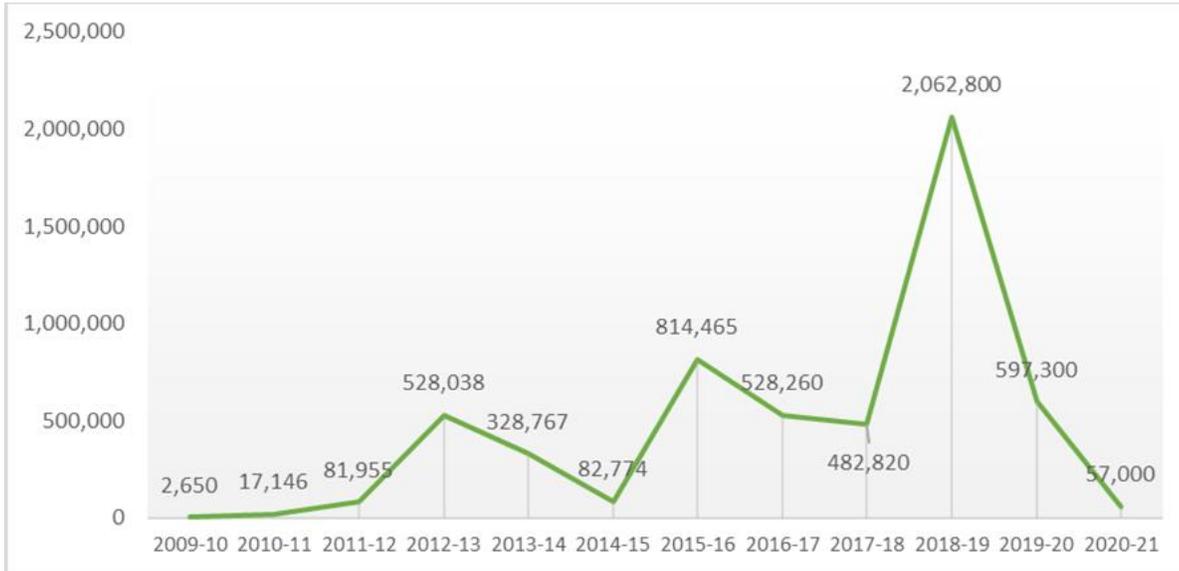

Figure 4: Wildlife-related Review Acts - Total Amount of Fines (2009-2020)

Under the wildlife-related Review Acts, 37% of all fines issued were less than $5,000, with an additional 6% of fines of $5,000, for a total of 43% of all fines issued were $5,000 or less. Furthermore, on the high end of the spectrum, 10% of fines were more than $100,000.

3.3.1 CWA

Figure 5 below sets out the total amount of fines per year under the CWA. The highest fine issued under the CWA was a $300,000 fine against the Athabasca County, a municipal district in Alberta. In 2019, the County was found to have conducted industrial activity at the Meanook National Wildlife Area.

3.3.2 MBCA

Below, Figure 6 shows the total amount of fines per year under the MBCA. The total fines issued under the MBCA over the review period is $3,861,511.

The top five highest fines issued under the MBCA are set out in Table 2. The highest fine was issued against Syncrude Canada Ltd. It pleaded guilty to violating the MBCA, following an event which led to the death of 31 great blue herons that were exposed to bitumen at a facility in Alberta.²¹

Table 3 shows the top five fines issued under WAPPRIITA for 2009-2020. The highest fine was issued against an individual for offences that were committed during a period of seven years, and involved trade in narwhal tusks. The individual also served an eight-month conditional sentence to be served in the community, including four months of house arrest. They were fined $385,000.

3.4 Parks Canada–CNPA

Under the CNPA, in the last five years, the total amount of fines per year is set out in Figure 8 below. The total amount of fines issued under CNPA from 2015 to 2020 is $1,087,730, including the fine issued in the Lake Louise Ski Resort Case (guilty pleas entered under both SARA and CNPA for felling 38 endangered Whitebark Pines, resulting in $500,000 fine for the conviction involving CNPA). Below, Figure 8 shows the total fines per year issued under CNPA. The Lake Louise Ski Resort Case has been excluded for current purposes given the data in the figure becomes skewed by its high value .

Furthermore, in the past five years (2015-2020) under the CNPA, 98.8% of fines were below $5,000,²² and only one case was above $100,000.

4	Brewster Inc.	$10,000	2017
5	Individual	$9,462	2018

3.5 No Charges

At the time of writing, ECCC confirmed there have been no charges under the AEPA, IRIA, and GGPPA. There have been no charges under GGPPA because it is still a relatively new Act, as it came into force in 2018. Furthermore, Parks Canada confirmed there have been no charges under the CNMCAA and SSLMPA. Parks Canada relies heavily on the issuance of tickets under the Contraventions Act for the SSLMPA. As for the CNMCAA, there are no regulations and only one national marine conservation area reserve has been established – the Gwaii Haanas National Marine Conservation Area Reserve. As most non-compliance that is discovered in the area occurs on land, the charges are laid under the CNPA.

²² This percentage excludes from the count values of zero or null.

4. External Engagement—Messages Heard

The following is a list of issues relevant to the Review that were raised on a recurring basis by key stakeholders during the external engagement efforts. Annex 3 summarizes external engagement efforts.

Fundamental Purpose of Sentencing

A review of the fundamental purpose of sentencing may be relevant to highlight the significance of recovery and restoration and linkages to the dangers and effects of climate change, in addition to deterrence. Moreover, the inclusion of other purposes of sentencing may be beneficial, including the specific incorporation of the purposes of sentencing set out in the Criminal Code, such as the separation of offenders from society, the rehabilitation of offenders, and the promotion of a sense of responsibility in offenders. Finally, questions about how these additional purposes of sentencing apply to corporate offenders were also raised.

Fine Quantum

The values set out in the fine regime were mostly considered adequate, except for offences that apply to wildlife infractions, as well as offences that may have an effect on climate change. The reduction of mandatory minimum fines was suggested when breaches are of technical or administrative obligations that have little or no impact on environmental protection. Fine values that are linked to the economic situation of the offender were also suggested.

*Non-Fine Sentencing Orders*²³

The significance of non-fine sentencing orders was highlighted, and considered to be a more effective tool for the purposes of both deterrence and restoration and recovery, especially against corporate offenders.

Aggravating and Mitigating Factors

The importance of including Indigenous-related views (e.g. as set out in Australian legislation, a sentence is aggravated if an offence concerns “an Aboriginal object or place or an Aboriginal area—the views of Aboriginal persons who have an association with the object, place or area concerned”²⁴) in the aggravating factors was raised. In addition, the possibility of adding mitigating factors, such as collaboration with authorities and the speed of return to compliance, amongst others, were brought up.

Miscellaneous Drafting Issues

Attention was drawn to various and varied drafting issues in the Review Acts, which could be clarified, and which exist in both the English and the French versions of the Review Acts.

²³ These are similar to what is sometimes referred to as “creative sentencing” orders, which is a catch-all term used to describe the various options in a section of legislation that covers court orders relating to penalty (e.g. community service orders, compensation orders, or publication orders). In the Review, the term “non-fine sentencing order” is used as many common creative sentencing orders are under the purview of the EDF.

²⁴ National Parks and Wildlife Act 1974 (NSW), s. 194(f).

Cross-cutting Issues

In addition, it was raised whether and how larger policy issues (i.e. societal choices), such as mitigation of the climate crisis, the pursuit of environmental justice, the harmonious use of land and waters, may be integrated within the fines and sentencing regime, and within the Review Acts in general.

In all the above cases, the interweaving of Indigenous legal worldviews and traditions was raised for possible consideration.

Out of Scope Issues

Two main issues were highlighted that are not within the scope of the Review. The first was to include in the Review other Federal Acts, such as the Fisheries Act and SARA, with a view to harmonizing penalties and fine regimes under other federal environmental legislation. The second was the necessity to review the entire framework of the Review Acts, including provisions outside of the statutory review requirements. For instance, the need to review the rate of success in bringing violators back into compliance after any kind of enforcement action, as well as the administration and perceived transparency of the EDF with respect to the funds received from the fines and penalties regimes.

5. Public Values, as well as Economic and Other Relevant Circumstances

The Review found four key changes in the global and national context over the last decade that shed light on whether the fine amounts and sentencing principles in the Review Acts still advance all relevant goals and remain consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances. The key changes are: (1) the relationship Canadians have with the environment and climate change; (2) the relationship between Indigenous Peoples and all Canadians and efforts to promote reconciliation, (3) the concern for environmental justice, and (4) the economic landscape in Canada.

5.1 Canadians and Their Relationship to the Environment

The Government of Canada has polled Canadians about the environment multiple times in the past 10 years. Whether the focus has been on the link between economic benefits or expenses and the environment²⁵ or with respect to the growing importance of central concepts such as biodiversity, ecosystem services, species at risks and the extent of human interaction with wildlife,²⁶ the polls show that Canadians value the environment and nature. For example, a 2021 public poll on species at risk, nature conservation and nature-based solutions to climate change²⁷ shows that 96% of Canadians

The survey was carried by Statistics Canada, on behalf of a partnership of federal, provincial, and territorial agencies, and with a sample of 86,951 Canadians 15 years of age and over.

considered nature to be at least somewhat important to their personal well-being, while 3 in 5 respondents (57%) specified that nature is very important to their well-being.²⁸ Earlier polls, such as those conducted in 1996²⁹ and 2012 concentrated on nature-related leisure activities or the spending of Canadians in relation to the environment. In contrast, the 2021 poll focused on Canadians' views on nature conservation. A July 2021 Global Ipsos Poll also found that “the current top-of-mind issues Canadians are now thinking about most are healthcare, affordability and cost of living, climate change and the economy — largely remaining the same from two years ago”.³⁰

Examples of the areas of concern that mark the relationship between Canadians and their environment relate to deforestation and other land use changes, ocean acidification, atmospheric pollution, wildlife conservation and biodiversity, the climate crisis, and others. The concern of Canadians with respect to the climate crisis, and its impact on forests, oceans, wildlife, and biodiversity, is particularly acute.

In concert with the changes in public opinion, Canadian governments at the federal, provincial-territorial, and local levels have increased spending on environmental protection over the past decade. For example, spending on environmental protection grew by 33% between 2008 and 2016, rising from $9.5 billion to $12.6 billion.³¹ Among member countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), Canada ranks fourth in environmental policy stringency.³²

Furthermore, knowledge creation on environmental issues in Canada, as seen through the publication of materials on Canada and the environment, has increased over the past 10 years. Over that period, there was a 41% increase of books, a 53.7% increase of articles, and a 371.6% increase of reports published on the subject of Canada and the environment. Over that period, there was a slight (15.74%) decrease in theses published on the subject.³³

During external engagement efforts, participants suggested that Canadians have become more sensitized to the issue of climate change as a global matter, but this did not necessarily translate into a greater concern for environmental protection in general. Although, climate change was raised repeatedly as a critical concern, it was also highlighted that such shift in Canadians was not universal. Furthermore, it was noted that the responsibility for the protection of the environment does not lie only with the government, but also with businesses, citizens and consumers.

5.2 Reconciliation and Relationship with Indigenous Peoples

In the past 10 years, significant events have propelled the federal government, provinces, territories, industry, academia, and civil society to make efforts towards reconciliation. Examples of such events include the Truth and Reconciliation Commission and its Calls to Action, the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls, and the Supreme Court of Canada's recognition of aboriginal title.³⁴ In 2016, the Government of Canada endorsed the United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples (the "Declaration") without qualification, and committed to its full and effective implementation. The United Nations Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples Act, which received Royal Assent on June 21, 2021, affirms the Declaration as a universal international human rights instrument with application in Canadian law. In 2018, the government also adopted and released the Principles Respecting the Government of Canada's Relationship with Indigenous Peoples. Since 2020, a number of former residential schools across Canada have been designated as National Historic Sites.³⁵ In 2021, the identification of unmarked and undocumented graves and burial sites at residential schools has brought to public consciousness the depths of pain and sense of injustice felt by Indigenous peoples in Canada, highlighting further the need for reconciliation.³⁶

Provinces and territories have also taken an active role in advancing reconciliation with Indigenous Peoples. In 2019, British Columbia became the first jurisdiction to pass legislation implementing UNDRIP.³⁷ Other examples include the September 2020 Mandate Letters from Premier Caroline Cochrane of the Northwest Territories that direct Ministers to lead efforts to implement UNDRIP and advance reconciliation, and Bill 76 in Ontario, which seeks to enact UNDRIP.³⁸

As mentioned above, industry has taken certain initiatives toward reconciliation over the last decade³⁹, and academia has committed to reconciliation through a number of initiatives, including the creation of the National Building Reconciliation Forum in 2015. This Forum brings together all post-secondary institutions across Canada and significant actors in the world of Indigenous education to promote projects directed towards advancing reconciliation.⁴⁰

The growing importance of reconciliation and understanding its effect on the Review Sections, for example, on how environmental offences impact Indigenous Peoples as both offenders, as well as victims of environmental offences, and how to interweave Indigenous worldviews and legal traditions in environmental sentencing was highlighted during external engagement efforts.

5.3 Environmental Justice

Environmental justice is concerned with the notion that environmental benefits and harms are not shared equally among different members of society⁴¹, and that certain groups and communities – namely, Indigenous and racialized communities and those with a lower socioeconomic status – often bear a disproportionate share of environmental burdens (e.g. environmental pollution and degradation).⁴² Specific local efforts have helped crystalize the idea that some marginalized and Indigenous communities are disproportionately affected by environmental degradation and harm. Local efforts have transitioned to broader national efforts to elevate the profile of environmental justice issues in Canada, which has led to an increase in attention from the media, academics, and policy makers. The relevance of environmental justice was also confirmed during external engagements efforts, although some participants shared that the fines and sentencing regime was not the appropriate place to address specific environmental problems that arise from the accumulation of multiple societal choices, such as climate change, unintended consequences of land use planning, and negative repercussion of spatial planning policies (e.g. residential areas near industrial activities). In contrast, other participants considered the fines and penalties regime should reflect distributional (and other equity) concerns.

5.4 Changes to Canada’s Economic Landscape

Macroeconomic factors, for example inflation and gross domestic product (GDP), that relate to changes over the past 10 years in the behaviour and performance of the economy as a whole, may also be relevant to whether fines and sentences achieve objectives such as deterrence against committing offences or denunciation of unlawful conduct.

In the last 10 years, the Canadian GDP growth (annual percentage) has oscillated, ranging from 3% in 2010 to 0.659% in 2015 to 3.171% in 2017, and back to 1.656% in 2019, with an average growth of 3.17% (2010 to 2019).⁴³ There has been an increase in population of approximately 10% with 3.5 million new Canadians.⁴⁴ In the last 10 years, average inflation has been of 1.716% (2010 to 2020).⁴⁵ In industry, the Business Development Bank of Canada’s study on The Scale Up Challenge: How are Canadian Companies Performing? (2016) concludes that “Canadian companies are slightly smaller than in the past, and are barely growing”.⁴⁶ Furthermore, it stated that 99.8% of all Canadian business are small (with 1 to 99 employees) or mid-sized (100 to 499 employees) firms.⁴⁷ Statistics Canada in 2017 affirmed that private sector businesses employed approximately 11.9 million individuals in Canada. The majority of private sector employees worked for small businesses, specifically 69.7% (8.3 million), compared with 19.9% (2.4 million) for medium-sized businesses and 10.4% (1.2 million) for large businesses. Thus, in total, small and mid-sized businesses employed 89.6% (10.7 million) of the private sector workforce, highlighting the important role small-medium enterprises play in employing Canadians.⁴⁸

The influence of multinational enterprises (MNEs) on the Canadian economy is also relevant to the changes in the Canadian economy over the past 10 years. In 2018, there were 27,746 MNEs operating in Canada (an increase of 2.2% from 2017), with a combined capital investment in Canada of $153.7 billion (an increase of 6.5% from 2017).⁴⁹ The influence of these MNEs on the Canadian economy is notable. In 2018, they contributed to more than one-third of all jobs in the corporate sector, half of GDP and nearly 60% of all investment in the form of machinery and equipment, non-residential construction and intellectual property products.⁵⁰

In addition, the COVID-19 pandemic has significantly impacted Canadians and the Canadian economy. It has also prompted aspirations regarding the path to recovery, which centres on investing in creating an inclusive, green economy.

During external engagement efforts, participants reiterated that Canada's economic landscape is a relevant factor for assessing the Review Acts. However, no particular change was highlighted that suggested that the Review Sections were not adequate as drafted. In some cases, judicial discretion was raised as being mostly sufficient in addressing any economic variances.

6. Results

The Review was guided by three main lines of inquiry or "questions". As previously noted, the three questions mirror the three elements of the provisions subject to the Review. The first relates to the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing, as set out in each of the Acts. The second addresses the sentencing regime, which includes the categorization of offenders, sentencing principles, fines, penalties, directors' and officers' liability and duties, and other court orders (the Sentencing Regime). The third considers other ancillary clauses (Ancillary Clauses), which include sections on absolute or conditional discharges, the due diligence defence, limitation periods, injunctions, and jurisdictional issues, for example. In answering these questions (set out below), the Review took into consideration key changes in the global and national context, as well as desk research, and key messages from the engagement efforts.

In all cases, the Review found that the fine amounts and sentencing principles in the Review Acts continue to advance all of the relevant goals and remain consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances.

⁴⁷ Businesses are categorized by number of employees, with small businesses having from 1 to 99 employees, mid-sized from 100 to 499, and large businesses 500 or more. See ibid.

6.1 Are the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances?

The EEA added a provision to each of the Review Acts setting out the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing: deterrence, denunciation, restoration and recovery, and the polluter-pays principle, as the case may be in each Act. The purposes of sentencing brought by the EEA were modeled after the Criminal Code and were intended to provide courts with further guidance in determining appropriate penalties by setting out the paramount purposes of a sentence under each specific statute. The codification of sentencing purposes for regulatory offences is a relatively recent phenomenon.⁵¹ Indeed, other pieces of long-standing environmental legislation at the federal and provincial levels, such as the Fisheries Act, SARA, and the Ontario Environmental Protection Act, lack such provisions.⁵² In contrast, more recent federal legislation outside of the environmental context, such as the Cannabis Act, both codifies and prioritizes sentencing purposes.⁵³

Comparable jurisdictions have codified fundamental purposes of sentencing in general,⁵⁴ and some have included other specific purposes for environmental sentencing⁵⁵, such as punishment, retribution, and community protection.⁵⁶ Under the Review Acts, these additional purposes are reflected by sentencing principles set out in the Criminal Code, which are incorporated both statutorily as well as by virtue of the Interpretation Act. Of note, the separation of offenders from society as a fundamental purpose was specifically raised during the engagement efforts, including how this should be considered in environmental sentencing particularly when dealing with corporate offenders.

Deterrence

Case law applying the Review Acts confirms that deterrence is paramount among the principles for environmental sentencing.⁵⁷ The paramountcy of deterrence in environmental sentencing is congruent with the increasing importance Canadians attribute to the environment, as outlined in Section 5.1, including species at risk, nature conservation, and nature-based solutions for climate change.⁵⁸ Comparable jurisdictions share Canada's emphasis on deterrence as a fundamental sentencing purpose. For example, the United Kingdom highlights the importance of deterrence in its Environmental Sentencing Guidelines.⁵⁹

Denunciation

Denunciation is derived directly from the Criminal Code and remains a key tenet of sentencing in the environmental context. The importance and efficacy of denunciation was highlighted during the engagement efforts, especially as it relates to corporate offenders.

Restoration and Recovery

The principles of restoration and recovery state that offenders should repair the damage they cause and assist in the rehabilitation and amelioration of that damage.⁶⁰ During the engagement efforts, restoration and recovery were deemed to be key to the purposes of sentencing, and in some cases were deemed paramount.

Polluter-pays

The polluter-pays principle has been widely recognized in international treaties, key documents by intergovernmental organizations, and Canadian jurisprudence.⁶¹ The principle seeks to ensure that offenders are held responsible for the effective clean-up and environmental restoration of any damage they cause.⁶² During engagement efforts, issues were raised relating to the treatment of pre-sentencing efforts made by an offender to clean-up, pay for, or otherwise remedy the contamination arising from their offending, and how that should factor, if at all, into the polluter pays principle at sentencing.

Additionally, it was noted that the polluter-pays principle has a permissive implication that potentially licences offenders to pollute as long as they pay for the damage done. If addressed in isolation, and not in conjunction with the principles of denunciation and deterrence, fines levied in accordance with the polluter-pays principle can become 'the cost of doing business.' The Environmental Law Centre of Alberta has considered whether the polluter pays principle should be modified to include an additional element where it covers not only the costs of repairing environmental damage, but also costs associated with avoiding and reducing environmental damage.⁶³ Nevertheless, given the paramountcy of deterrence in environmental sentencing, the polluter-pays principle may serve as a 'floor' to ensure that offenders are, at a minimum, required to rectify harm done. Thus, although the polluter-pays principle may raise certain concerns, the Review found that the principle remains a solid tenet of environmental sentencing.

Considering the above, the Review confirmed that the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing remain consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances.

Areas for further consideration

Notwithstanding the above, in the course of the Review, some concepts were identified that could be further explored, researched and consulted upon in the event there is an opportunity for legislative reform in the future, such as:

- Broadening of the current application of deterrence under the Review Acts, such that sentencing under the Review Acts deters environmental offences generally rather than just offences related to the specific subject matter of the Act at issue.⁶⁴ In contrast, denunciation is defined within the Review Acts in a comprehensive manner, and not limited to a violation of the Act at stake.⁶⁵ A broader approach takes a more holistic view of deterrence and is in line with the approach in the Criminal Code for some offences.⁶⁶ However, while the approach would enhance the breadth of deterrence under the Review Acts, it may ultimately complicate proceedings under the Review Acts without materially changing sentencing outcomes.
- Formally prioritizing deterrence among the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing would entail codifying the common law principle that deterrence is paramount over the other sentencing principles in environmental sentencing.⁶⁷ The prioritization of sentencing purposes is already found in Canadian statutes, such as the Criminal Code and the Cannabis Act.⁶⁸ Formally prioritizing deterrence in the Review Acts would provide the judiciary with greater guidance and help to ensure that fines under the Review Acts do not merely amount to the ‘cost of doing business’, particularly for very large corporate offenders. On the other hand, formally prioritizing the fundamental purposes of sentencing may reduce the judiciary’s discretion in pursuing a sentence that is proportionate and individualized.

6.2 Is the Sentencing Regime consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances to advance the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing?

One of the key objectives of the EEA was the modernization of the fines and sentencing regime of the Review Acts. The EEA added minimum fines and increased maximum fines in all Acts. As previously noted, the new provisions aimed to provide courts with “goal posts” to impose higher fines and sentences that reflected the seriousness of the offences.

The Review examined various aspects of the sentencing regime, including the categorization of offenders, fine regime (minimum and maximum fines), additional court orders, second and subsequent offences, continuing offences, aggravating and mitigating factors, and directors’ and officers’ liability. Overall, it found that the Sentencing Regime remains consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances and continues to advance the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing, as explained below.

6.2.1 Categorization of Offenders

Under the current sentencing regime in the Review Acts, the fine ranges vary based on the categorization of the offender. Excluding vessels and ships, there are three main categories of offenders: individuals, small revenue corporations, and other persons (including non-small revenue corporations). The last category is essentially a catch-all for legal persons and other entities that are not individuals or small revenue corporations. All corporations that are not small revenue corporations, including very large offenders, will also fall into this category. As a result, any corporate offender that exceeds $5 million in annual gross revenue will be subject to the highest fine ranges in the Review Acts. Additional categorization of offenders has been highlighted by case law.⁶⁹ In other instances, case law has also clarified questions relating to the categorization of an organization.⁷⁰

Other Canadian federal and provincial statutes and legislation from other jurisdictions categorize offenders differently than the Review Acts. In Canada, the categorization of offenders is not consistent across various pieces of federal legislation.⁷¹ In contrast, provincial Acts tend to have two categories of offenders (individual /natural persons and corporations or other persons).⁷² In Australia, the United Kingdom, the United States, and New Zealand, individuals and organizations for sentencing purposes are distinguished, either implicitly or explicitly. For example, New Zealand has separate fine maxima for individuals and for organizations, with higher fines for the latter category.⁷³ The United Kingdom Sentencing Guidelines take a more granular approach to categorization of organizations based on their ⁶⁹ See e.g. Terroco, para 78. The Alberta Court of Appeal characterized a corporation with $20 million in annual gross revenue as a “mid-level corporation”.

⁷¹ See e.g. SARA, s. 97. SARA includes a category for non-profit corporations, while the Fisheries Act uses only a person.

⁷² See e.g. Environmental Management Act, SBC 2003, c 58; Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, RSA 2000, c E-12, Environment Act, RSY 2002, c 76, Environment Quality Act, CQLR c Q-2, and Environmental Protection Act, SNL 2002, c E-14.2.

turnover (i.e. the amount received in sales for a specified period),⁷⁴ while the United States Sentencing Guidelines define “organization” in a broad fashion, which includes unions, trusts, partnerships, associations, pension funds, for instance.⁷⁵

The variations in the categorization of offenders is noteworthy for three reasons. The first is the fact that different types of offenders are deterred by different sanctions. Therefore, the categorization of an offender that is linked to both a particular fine range, as well as any other penal sanctions, is important in the deterrence of that specific category of offender. For example, the United Kingdom’s categories for large and very large corporate offenders may allow for stronger deterrence for that type of offender, than a general category for corporate offenders.⁷⁶ The second is that due to the large range between minimum and maximum fines set out in the Review Acts, coupled with the limited number of reported cases on sentencing applying the Review Acts, there are few goal posts in sentence setting. A granular approach to the categorization of offenders may provide clearer legislative goal posts to courts regarding a type of offender. The third reason is that the Review Acts do not have a separate category for organizations, such as limited liability partnerships, associations, non-governmental organizations, unlike, for example, in the United States Sentencing Guidelines where one is included. During engagement, this was raised as a point of interest.

6.2.2 Fine Regime: Minimum & Maximum Fines

Under the current regime, in addition to tailored ranges of fines for different categories of offenders as noted above, the Review Acts set out minimum fines and increased maximum fines for serious offences that involve direct harm or risk of harm to the environment, or obstruction of authority (Designated Offences). A summary of the fine regime under the EEA can be found at Fine regime under the Environmental Enforcement Act - Canada.ca.

Under SARA, which was not modified by the EEA or consequently part of the Review, there are no minimum amounts, only maximum fines set out in the legislation.⁷⁷ In some cases, federal Acts that relate to economic crime have fines based on values that change over time such as turnover or other economic factors of the offender.⁷⁸ These are known as relative fines. The United Kingdom Sentencing Guidelines, for example, include relative fines for individuals (i.e. based on their weekly income),⁷⁹ and the United States Federal Sentencing Guidelines include relative fines for offences related to any economic gain arising from the offence.⁸⁰ New Zealand follows the United States Federal Sentencing Guidelines in that respect.⁸¹

It is worth noting that the Review Acts’ use of absolute fine ranges makes those Acts less resilient to inflation than comparable regimes in other jurisdictions. As mentioned above, both the United Kingdom and the United States use relative fines, which implicitly reflect inflation. Moreover, in the United States, there are specific Acts, rules and guidelines that require the Environmental Protection Agency to adjust statutory penalties on an annual basis to reflect inflation.⁸² Australia also takes measures to ensure that its fine amounts reflect inflation. In Australia, fines are calculated on the basis of “penalty units”, the value of which is determined by an indexation formula that is designed to adjust fines to the country’s present economic landscape.⁸³ In contrast, the Review Acts’ fine ranges do not scale in proportion with inflation and, as a result, may become less stringent over time.

Even though minimum fine amounts may be problematic,⁸⁴ the Review Acts provide for a relief mechanism should a court determine that there would be undue financial hardship if the minimum fine were to be imposed.⁸⁵ Although there may be such concerns, there was almost unanimous agreement from participants in the course of engagement efforts that minimum fines for environmental offences are key. The reason is that minimum fines provide clear goal posts by Parliament to courts of the seriousness of environmental offences.

Furthermore, the fine ranges were not raised as being a significant issue in the course of engagement efforts, and it was highlighted that fines issued under the Review Acts have never reached the maximum amounts. The data confirmed this finding. Moreover, as noted during the Standing Committee on Environment and Sustainable Development’s hearing on the Enforcement of CEPA, the “size of a fine (is) much less significant as a deterrent than the certainty of prosecution.”⁸⁶ This was also confirmed during the Review and in engagement efforts. Also, due to the large range between minimum and maximum fines, it was understood that the fine ranges allowed for flexibility and the application of the cornerstone principle of Canadian sentencing—the constructing of proportionate and individualized sentences—that encompasses both the regulatory, as well as the criminal objectives of the Review Acts. However, some participants in engagement efforts highlighted concerns with corporate offenders, especially large multinational offenders, and whether they are duly fined and penalized.

6.2.3 Additional Court Orders

All Review Acts contain similar court order provisions authorizing the court, upon sentencing, to order the offender to take certain measures which are other than paying fines.⁸⁷ For examples of measures, see paragraph 16(1)(b.5) of the MBCA where the court may direct the offender to pay, in the manner prescribed by the court, an amount to environmental or other groups to assist in their work in or for a community near the place where the offence was committed, or paragraphs 16(1)(i) and (j) which allow the court to order the offender to surrender any permit issued under the MBCA and prohibit the offender from applying for a new one.

Both the desk research, as well as engagement efforts, highlighted that non-fine sentencing orders could play a role in deterring offenders, especially corporate offenders. In federal,⁸⁸ provincial,⁸⁹ and comparable jurisdictions,⁹⁰ non-fine sentencing orders are discretionary, when legislated. In comparable jurisdictions, like the United States, restitution and community service for corporate offenders is a possibility as an addition to, and not in lieu of, fines and imprisonment.⁹¹ The United Kingdom sets out ranges of community orders, which include community service and prohibited activities.⁹² Other types of court orders in other Canadian legislation, as well as other comparable jurisdictions, include corporate probation,⁹³ prohibition of directors and officers to act as directors and officers for a period of time,⁹⁴ economic sanctions, and corporate community service.

Non-fine sentencing orders are key to environmental sentencing, and the Review noted that the Review Acts have a comprehensive list of non-fine sentencing orders, including a general provision that allows for courts to impose other types of non-fine sentences.⁹⁵ Although such provisions are wide-ranging, non-fine sentences particularly directed towards corporate offenders, such as set out in the United Kingdom and the United States, are not expressly included.

6.2.4 Second or Subsequent Offences and Continuing Offences

The Review Acts include doubled minimum and maximum fines for second or subsequent offences. Furthermore, repeat offender clauses in the Review Acts set out the ways a court may deem a “second” or “subsequent” offence, see for example subsection 27(3) of the CNPA. A person is deemed to be a repeat offender if it has been convicted of a “substantially similar offence”.

Other pieces of federal legislation, including the SARA, Fisheries Act, and the Criminal Code, have penalties that escalate for second or subsequent offences.⁹⁶ Compared to the Review Acts, the Criminal Code deems offences to be second or subsequent offences in a broader range of circumstances. For example, a variety of prior firearm offences can count as a first offence for robbery with a firearm. The United States, United Kingdom, and Australia (at the state level) employ penalty escalation for subsequent environmental offences.⁹⁷ New Zealand does not seem to have these statutory provisions.

Also of note, under most of the Review Acts, if a contravention of the Act or its regulations is committed or continued on more than one day, it constitutes a separate offence for each day on which it is committed or continued, see for example subsection 27(2) of the CNPA. In the case of GGPPA, a person that committed an offence is liable to be convicted for a separate offence for each CO₂e tonne of a greenhouse gas that is emitted over the applicable emissions limit for which no compensation is provided (section 240 of GGPPA). In addition, many of the wildlife Review Acts provide that the fine for an offence involving more than one specimen may be calculated as though each one had been the subject of separate charges, see for example subsection 27(1) of the CNPA.

6.2.5 Aggravating and Mitigating Factors

The Review Acts list aggravating factors that must be considered by the court when determining the fine amount and provide that the absence of a listed aggravating factor is not a mitigating factor. See, for example, subsection 13.09(3) of the CWA. Many other federal Acts include legislated aggravating factors.⁹⁸ While some provincial Acts do include them,⁹⁹ it is not as prevalent as in federal Acts. Both the United States and the United Kingdom have aggravating factors in their sentencing guidelines which are specific to environmental crime, while Australia, for example, has legislated aggravating factors for all crime.¹⁰⁰

The Review Acts do not include mitigating factors, as these are generally found in the common law. In many federal Acts, the same provision as set out in the Review Acts that states that the absence of an aggravating factor is not a mitigating factor, is also quite prevalent.¹⁰¹ Furthermore, legislated mitigating factors are not common, either in provincial or federal Acts. In the sentencing guidelines of comparable jurisdictions, for example in the United Kingdom, mitigating factors are listed, although such list is not definitive.

The Review found that the aggravating factors set out in the Review Acts are comprehensive, as well as comparable to those found in other jurisdictions, when these are legislated. During engagement efforts, the Review heard from a participant that legislating mitigating factors may be beneficial, although others deemed it to be unnecessary.

6.2.6 Directors' and Officers' Liability

Included in all Review Acts are provisions, adapted as applicable to each Act, that set out that where a corporation commits an offence under the Act, any officer, director, agent or mandatory of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence, and is liable to the punishment provided for an individual for the offence, whether or not the corporation has been convicted.

The language in the Review Acts on directors' and officers' liability mirrors the language found in a vast number of both federal and provincial legislation.¹⁰² Furthermore, the language has been considered in a number of cases at all levels of court.¹⁰³ In the course of engagement efforts, participants highlighted that the provisions associated with the liability of directors and officers were rarely used for a number of reasons, such as the difficulty in adducing evidence internally from private corporations and the distance of directors and officers from decisions on the ground, for example. In some cases, it was acknowledged that directors and officers are charged when feasible.¹⁰⁴

Considering all of the above, the Review found that overall, the Sentencing Regime remains consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances and continues to advance the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing.

Areas for further consideration

Notwithstanding the above, in the course of the Review, some concepts were identified that could be further explored, researched and consulted upon in the event there is an opportunity for legislative reform in the future, such as:

- Further categorizing offenders for sentencing purposes to include other legal entities, such as limited liability partnerships, municipalities, very large corporate offenders, as well as other categories for individuals, such as Indigenous offenders. The inclusion of new categories of offenders may be beneficial for a number of reasons, for example, to increase certainty for offenders due to the large range between minimum and maximum amounts. However, the lack of sentencing data from reported case law, and the granularity of this approach, may trigger concerns. For instance, apprehension associated with the required evidence needed to be adduced to prove an offender's category, as well as possible concerns with parity of sentencing, a fundamental principle in sentencing as set out in the Criminal Code, may arise.
- Adjusting the fine ranges to reflect inflation. Fines could be adjusted to reflect inflation in numerous ways. Fines under the Review Acts could be based on a formula that automatically accounts for inflation, as is done in Australia.¹⁰⁵ Alternatively, the Review Acts could be amended to insert their fine amounts in their regulations rather than the Acts themselves, which would make the fine amounts easier to periodically update to reflect inflation. Finally, the introduction of relative fine amounts would ensure that fines under the Review Acts implicitly reflected inflation.

¹⁰² More than 90 federal Acts mirror this language. See e.g. Fisheries Act, s. 78.2; SARA, s. 98; Oceans Act, SC 1996, c 31, s. 39.61; Extractive Sector Transparency Measures Act, SC 2014, c 39, s. 376; Energy Administration Act, RSC 1985, c E-6, Energy Efficiency Act, SC 1992, c 36; Fishing and Recreational Harbours Act, RSC 1985, c F-24. Numerous provincial statutes also use this language. See also Toxics Reduction Act, 2009, SO 2008, c 19; Food and Safety Quality Act, 2001, SO 2001 c 20; Invasive Species Act, 2015, SO 2015, c 22.

- Including new non-fine measures in the court orders sections of the Review Sections, as well as creating new, non-fine based mandatory sentences (i.e. using creative sentences in mandatory sentences). As noted, creative sentences are key in environmental sentencing.¹⁰⁶ Due to the possible effect on deterrence, incorporating mandatory non-fine sentencing options as part of mandatory sentences could warrant further evaluation. At the same time, there must be some judicial discretion, such as already found within the Review Acts, related to the non-imposition of mandatory fines in cases of undue financial hardship.¹⁰⁷ Other types of creative sentences, such as corporate probation,¹⁰⁸ prohibition of directors and officers to act as directors and officers for a period of time,¹⁰⁹ economic sanctions, and corporate community service, could also be further explored.
- Clarifying the definition of subsequent offence in order to better subject offenders with a history of environmental non-compliance to the more stringent penalties for second and subsequent offences. Such a proposal, which was raised during the engagement efforts, could take numerous forms. For example, it could remove the requirement that prior offences be “substantially similar” in order to trigger the second or subsequent offence rules; it could consider the offender’s compliance history with “substantially similar” environmental offences in other jurisdictions; it could involve considering the offender’s past offences against vulnerable communities or Indigenous communities; it could involve considering the compliance history of an offender’s directors or officers; or it could involve deeming subsequent offences by non-arm’s length parties to be second or subsequent offences. However, this approach could put disproportionate emphasis on punishment, as opposed to bringing people into compliance.¹¹⁰
- Including an aggravating factor for offences that result in cumulative impacts or effects.¹¹¹ Although the Review Acts list numerous aggravating factors, none of these encompass the principle of cumulative effects of harm or potential harm of an offence.¹¹² The case law applying the Review Acts has clarified this may be a significant consideration, although it may also still be a point of contention.¹¹³ Numerous federal¹¹⁴ and provincial Acts¹¹⁵ include the concept of “cumulative effects”, but this is usually when dealing with advancement in approval processes, such as environmental assessments. The inclusion of an aggravating factor for cumulative impacts of offences, however, may not bring any material differences to cases, as the burden of proof of an aggravating factor is beyond a reasonable doubt, and may be difficult to prove.

6.3 Are the Ancillary Clauses consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances?

In this line of inquiry, the focus was on the clauses of the Review Sections that are ancillary to the Fine Regime and the Fundamental Purposes of Sentencing, including but not limited to: proof of offences (e.g. section 60 of the AEPA), certificates of analysis (e.g. section 285 of CEPA), and the due diligence defence (e.g. section 13.17 of the MBCA).

In the course of the Review no major consideration arose with regard to the Ancillary Clauses of the Review Sections, whether in the literature or during engagement efforts. For example, the due diligence defence is widely used in both federal¹¹⁶ and provincial¹¹⁷ Acts, and is a core part of strict liability offences.¹¹⁸

Considering the above, the Review found that the Ancillary Clauses are consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances.

Areas for further consideration

Notwithstanding the above, in the course of the Review some concepts were identified, which could be further explored, researched and consulted upon, in the event there is an opportunity for legislative reform in the future, such as:

- Specifying the judicial venue for indictable offences under the Review Acts to ensure that certain, more serious cases (e.g. complex or of higher gravity) under those Acts are within the absolute jurisdiction of a superior court of criminal jurisdiction.¹¹⁹ At present, the Review Acts do not contain any provisions to that effect. During engagement efforts some participants noted that many cases are exceptionally complex, reliant on expert evidence, and, as a result, not best-suited to be heard by lower courts. This is especially true when dealing with cases where the offender is a very large corporate offender, for example. Other federal legislation, such as the Competition Act, does include a provision for absolute jurisdiction of a superior court in the cases of indictable offences. However, it must be noted that the data does not show that multinationals are the main objects of prosecutions under the Review Acts. In fact, in most cases, offenders are individuals and private corporations.

6.4 Other Areas for Future Consideration

6.4.1 Key Changes to National Context—Reconciliation and Environmental Justice

Key changes in the global and national context over the last decade shed light on whether the fine amounts and sentencing principles in the Review Acts still advance all relevant goals and remain consistent with public values, as well as economic and other relevant circumstances. In particular, considerations related to Canadians' relationship with the environment and changes in the economic landscape have been taken into account. However, key changes related to the importance attached to improving the relationship between Indigenous Peoples and all Canadians and efforts to promote reconciliation, as well as the increased recognition of environmental justice concepts warrant specific mention here.

Opportunities for more engagement with Indigenous partners would be warranted if legislative changes are envisaged in the future. In particular, engagement could seek to better understand the possible impacts of the 94 calls to action (“Calls to Action”) of the Truth and Reconciliation Commission. For example, the Calls to Action related to Indigenous offenders, Indigenous victims and communities, and the recognition and implementation of Indigenous justice systems, and how they may impact the Review Sections. Furthermore, environmental justice is beginning to permeate the environmental arena. Further engagement and study may be pursued in order to examine if and how the Review Acts and Sections may be impacted by environmental justice considerations.

6.4.2 Non Binding Sentencing Guidelines

Sentencing guidelines for environmental crime are used in the United Kingdom, the United States, and Australia. New Zealand has general guidelines that also apply to environmental crime. In Canada, there is no sentencing guideline at the federal level. Instead, enforcement officers, prosecutors, and courts depend on the ranges established by legislated mandatory minimums and maximums for offences, and case law. While the Supreme Court of Canada (SCC) has endorsed the use of informal sentencing ranges by appellate courts to guide discretion of lower courts, it has reiterated that “sentencing ranges are primarily guidelines, and not hard and fast rules.”¹²⁰ Sentencing ranges, the SCC has held, are not intended to restrict the discretion of a sentencing judge, but rather to provide a historical snapshot of sentencing decisions made by sentencing judges for certain offences for individuals in certain circumstances.¹²¹

¹¹⁹ See e.g. Competition Act, s. 34(3).

¹²⁰ R v Lacasse, 2015 SCC 64, para 60.

¹²¹ Ibid, para 67.

Ontario is the only Canadian province or territory with environmental sentencing guidelines.¹²² British Columbia has crown counsel guidelines for environmental prosecutions,¹²³ and New Brunswick¹²⁴ and Nova Scotia¹²⁵ have departmental guidelines summarizing their environmental statutes (including the fine provisions). However, these latter guidelines do not provide any additional substantive advice on how fines ought to apply.

Establishing non-binding sentencing guidelines for environmental offences in Canada would allow for judicial discretion but still represent a paradigm shift and a significant undertaking. Such guidelines may bring benefits such as clear sentencing goal posts for environmental offences. This approach would likely also require consultation with other federal departments that operate in the regulatory space given the impacts that might transcend environmental offending.

7. Conclusion

In 2010, the EEA came into force marking a new era for environmental enforcement in Canada. Triggered by a growing understanding of the extent and severity of environmental offending and its impact on Canadians, the EEA modernized the environmental fines and sentencing regime of the Review Acts. Within these changes, the EEA included a requirement to review the offence and penalty sections of the Review Acts every 10 years. Its purpose is to ensure that fine amounts and sentencing principles continue to advance all relevant goals, and keep pace with societal and economic changes. This Report is the product of the first Review since the EEA came into force.

This Report has presented the background of the EEA, the methodology employed in the course of the Review, and the fines and sentencing principles at work under the Review Acts. The Review found that, in general, the Review Sections remain consistent with public values, as well as economic and other circumstances. Nonetheless, a number of concepts were identified that may be further explored, researched and consulted upon in the event there is an opportunity for legislative reform in the future.

Application

(2) Subsection (1) applies only to previous convictions on indictment and to previous convictions on summary conviction, and to previous convictions under any similar procedure under any Act of the legislature of a province.

2009, c. 14, s. 12

Relief from minimum fine

50.6 The court may impose a fine that is less than the minimum amount provided for in section 50 or 50.3, as the case may be, if it is satisfied, on the basis of evidence submitted to the court, that the minimum fine would cause undue financial hardship. The court shall provide reasons if it imposes a fine that is less than the minimum amount provided for in any of those sections.

2009, c. 14, s. 12

Additional fine

50.7 If a person or a Canadian vessel or other vessel is convicted of an offence under this Act and the court is satisfied that, as a result of the commission of the offence, the person — or, if the offender is a Canadian vessel or other vessel, the owner or operator of the vessel — acquired any property, benefit or advantage, the court shall order the offender to pay an additional fine in an amount equal to the court's estimation of the value of that property, benefit or advantage. The additional fine may exceed the maximum amount of any fine that may otherwise be imposed under this Act.

2009, c. 14, s. 12

Notice to shareholders

50.8 If a corporation that has shareholders is convicted of an offence under this Act, the court shall make an order directing the corporation to notify its shareholders, in the manner and within the time directed by the court, of the facts relating to the commission of the offence and of the details of the punishment imposed.

2009, c. 14, s. 12

Fundamental purpose of sentencing

50.9 The fundamental purpose of sentencing for offences under this Act is to contribute to respect for the law protecting the Antarctic environment and dependent and associated ecosystems in light of the global significance of the Antarctic and the Treaty through the imposition of just sanctions that have as their objectives

- (a) to deter the offender and any other person from committing offences under this Act;
- (b) to denounce unlawful conduct that damages or creates a risk of damage to the environment; and
- (c) to reinforce the “polluter pays” principle by ensuring that offenders are held responsible for effective clean-up and environmental restoration.

2009, c. 14, s. 12

Sentencing principles

50.91 (1) In addition to the principles and factors that the court is otherwise required to consider, including those set out in sections 718.1 to 718.21 of the Criminal Code, the court shall consider the following principles when sentencing a person who is convicted of an offence under this Act:

- (a) the amount of the fine should be increased to account for every aggravating factor associated with the offence, including the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2); and
- (b) the amount of the fine should reflect the gravity of each aggravating factor associated with the offence.

Aggravating factors

(2) The aggravating factors are the following:

- (a) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to the Antarctic environment or any dependent and associated ecosystem;
- (b) the damage caused by the offence is extensive, persistent or irreparable;
- (c) the offender committed the offence intentionally or recklessly;
- (d) the offender failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the commission of the offence despite having the financial means to do so;
- (e) by committing the offence or failing to take action to prevent its commission, the offender increased revenue or decreased costs or intended to increase revenue or decrease costs;
- (f) the offender committed the offence despite having been warned by an enforcement officer or an inspector of the circumstances that subsequently became the subject of the offence;
- (g) the offender has a history of non-compliance with federal or provincial legislation that relates to environmental or wildlife conservation or protection; and
- (h) after the commission of the offence, the offender
 - (i) attempted to conceal its commission,
 - (ii) failed to take prompt action to prevent, mitigate or remediate its effects, or
 - (iii) failed to take prompt action to reduce the risk of committing similar offences in the future.

Absence of aggravating factor

(3) The absence of an aggravating factor set out in subsection (2) is not a mitigating factor.

Meaning of damage

(4) For the purposes of paragraphs (2)(a) and (b), damage includes loss of use value and non-use value.

Reasons

(5) If the court is satisfied of the existence of one or more of the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2) but decides not to increase the amount of the fine because of that factor, the court shall give reasons for that decision.

2009, c. 14, s. 12

Proceedings against vessels

50.92 (1) The provisions of this Act and the Criminal Code relating to indictable or summary conviction offences that apply to persons apply also to Canadian vessels and other vessels, with any modifications that the circumstances require.

Direction binds vessel

(2) For the purpose of prosecuting a Canadian vessel or any other vessel for contravening a direction made under subsection 30(8), section 37.01 or subsection 46(3), any direction made under any of those provisions that is given to the master or a crew member of the vessel binds the vessel as though it had been given to the vessel.

Service

(3) If a Canadian vessel or other vessel is charged with having committed an offence under this Act, the summons may be served by leaving it with the authorized representative, master or any officer of the vessel or by posting the summons on some conspicuous part of the vessel.

Appearance at trial

(4) If a Canadian vessel or other vessel is charged with having committed an offence under this Act, the vessel may appear by counsel or representative. Despite the Criminal Code, if the vessel does not so appear, a court may, on proof of service of the summons, proceed to hold the trial.

2009, c. 14, s. 12

Liability of directors, officers, etc., of corporations

51 (1) If a corporation commits an offence under this Act, any director, officer, agent or mandatary of the corporation who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to the penalty provided for by this Act for an individual in respect of the offence committed by the corporation, whether or not the corporation has been prosecuted or convicted.

Liability of directors and officers of corporate owners of vessels

(2) If a Canadian vessel or other vessel commits an offence under this Act, every director or officer of a corporation that is an owner or an operator of the vessel who directed or influenced the corporation's policies or activities in respect of conduct that is the subject matter of the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence and is liable on conviction to the penalty provided for by this Act for an individual who commits an offence under subsection 50(1), whether or not the vessel has been prosecuted or convicted.

Duties of directors and officers of corporations

(3) Every director and officer of a corporation, including every director and officer of a corporation that is the owner or operator of a Canadian vessel or other vessel who is in a position to direct or influence the corporation's policies or activities relating to conduct prohibited by this Act, shall take all reasonable care to ensure that the corporation or the vessel, as the case may be, complies with

(a) this Act and the regulations; and

(b) any orders and directions of, and prohibitions and requirements imposed by, any court, the Minister, enforcement officers, inspectors and analysts.

Duties of owners, operators, masters and chief engineers of vessels

(2) The owner, operator, master and the chief engineer of a Canadian vessel or other vessel shall take all reasonable care to ensure that the vessel complies with

(a) this Act and the regulations; and

Offences involving more than one animal, plant, etc.

53.1 If an offence involves more than one animal or plant, or more than one native bird or native plant as defined in subsection 12(2), the fine to be imposed in respect of that offence may, despite sections 50, 50.1, 50.3 and 50.4, be the total of the fines that would have been imposed if each of the animals, plants, native birds or native plants had been the subject of a separate information.

2009, c. 14, s. 13

Identifying authorized representative, master, etc.

54 The authorized representative or master of a Canadian vessel or the registered owner or pilot in command of a Canadian aircraft may be charged with an offence under this Act as authorized representative, master, registered owner or pilot in command of the vessel or aircraft if it is adequately identified, and no such charge is invalid by reason only that it does not name the authorized representative, master, registered owner or pilot in command.

Limitation period

57 No proceedings by way of summary conviction in respect of an offence under this Act may be instituted more than five years after the day on which the subject matter of the proceedings arose, unless the prosecutor and the defendant agree that they may be instituted after the five years.

2003, c. 20, s. 57/2009, c. 14, s. 14

Documents admissible in evidence

58 (1) A document made, given or issued under this Act and appearing to be signed by an analyst is admissible in evidence and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the statements contained in the document without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the document.

(a) to refrain from doing any act or thing that, in the opinion of the court, may constitute or be directed toward the commission of an offence under this Act; or

Conditions of order

(2) If an order is made under subsection (1) and the offender contravenes or fails to comply with it, or is convicted of an offence under this Act, the prosecutor may apply to the court to revoke the discharge, convict the offender of the offence to which the discharge relates and impose any sentence that could have been imposed if the offender had been convicted at the time the order was made.

Suspended sentence

65 (1) If an offender is convicted of an offence under this Act, the court may suspend the passing of sentence and may, having regard to the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, make an order under section 66.

Application by prosecutor

Sentencing

Fundamental purpose of sentencing

287 The fundamental purpose of sentencing for offences under this Act is to contribute, in light of the significant and many threats to the environment and to human health and to the importance of a healthy environment to the well-being of Canadians, to respect for the law protecting the environment and human health through the imposition of just sanctions that have as their objectives

- (b) to denounce unlawful conduct that damages or creates a risk of damage to the environment or harms or creates a risk of harm to human health; and
- (c) to reinforce the “polluter pays” principle by ensuring that offenders are held responsible for effective clean-up and environmental restoration.

1999, c. 33, s. 287
2009, c. 14, s. 81

Sentencing principles

287.1 (1) In addition to the principles and factors that the court is otherwise required to consider, including those set out in sections 718.1 to 718.21 of the Criminal Code, the court shall consider the following principles when sentencing a person who is convicted of an offence under this Act:

- (a) the amount of the fine should be increased to account for every aggravating factor associated with the offence, including the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2); and
- (b) the amount of the fine should reflect the gravity of each aggravating factor associated with the offence.

Aggravating factors

(2) The aggravating factors are the following:

- (a) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to the environment or environmental quality;
- (b) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to any unique, rare, particularly important or vulnerable component of the environment;
- (c) the offence caused harm or risk of harm to human health;
- (d) the damage or harm caused by the offence is extensive, persistent or irreparable;
- (e) the offender committed the offence intentionally or recklessly;

- (g) by committing the offence or failing to take action to prevent its commission, the offender increased revenue or decreased costs or intended to increase revenue or decrease costs;
- (h) the offender committed the offence despite having been warned by an enforcement officer of the circumstances that subsequently became the subject of the offence;
- (i) the offender has a history of non-compliance with federal or provincial legislation that relates to environmental or wildlife conservation or protection; and
- (j) after the commission of the offence, the offender
 - (i) attempted to conceal its commission,
 - (ii) failed to take prompt action to prevent, mitigate or remediate its effects, or
 - (iii) failed to take prompt action to reduce the risk of committing similar offences in the future.

Absence of aggravating factor

(3) The absence of an aggravating factor set out in subsection (2) is not a mitigating factor.

Meaning of damage

(4) For the purposes of paragraphs (2)(a), (b) and (d), damage includes loss of use value and non-use value.

Reasons

(5) If the court is satisfied of the existence of one or more of the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2) but decides not to increase the amount of the fine because of that factor, the court shall give reasons for that decision.

2009, c. 14, s. 102

Fundamental purpose of sentencing

13.09 The fundamental purpose of sentencing for offences under this Act is to contribute, in light of the long-standing recognition of the social, cultural and environmental importance of migratory birds, to respect for the law protecting and conserving migratory birds and their nests through the imposition of just sanctions that have as their objectives

- (a) to deter the offender and any other person from committing offences under this Act;
- (b) to denounce unlawful conduct that damages or creates a risk of damage to migratory birds or their nests; and
- (c) to reinforce the “polluter pays” principle and to restore migratory birds and their habitats.

2009, c. 14, s. 102

Sentencing principles

13.1 (1) In addition to the principles and factors that the court is otherwise required to consider, including those set out in sections 718.1 to 718.21 of the Criminal Code, the court shall consider the following principles when sentencing a person who is convicted of an offence under this Act:

- (a) the amount of the fine should be increased to account for every aggravating factor associated with the offence, including the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2); and
- (b) the amount of the fine should reflect the gravity of each aggravating factor associated with the offence.

Aggravating factors

(2) The aggravating factors are the following:

- (a) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to migratory birds or their nests;
- (b) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to any unique, rare, particularly important or vulnerable population of migratory birds;
- (c) the damage caused by the offence is extensive, persistent or irreparable;
- (d) the offender committed the offence intentionally or recklessly;
- (e) the offender failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the commission of the offence despite having the financial means to do so;
- (f) by committing the offence or failing to take action to prevent its commission, the offender increased revenue or decreased costs or intended to increase revenue or decrease costs;
- (g) the offender committed the offence despite having been warned by a game officer of the circumstances that subsequently became the subject of the offence;
- (h) the offender has a history of non-compliance with federal or provincial legislation that relates to environmental or wildlife conservation or protection; and
- (i) after the commission of the offence, the offender
 - (i) attempted to conceal its commission,
 - (ii) failed to take prompt action to prevent, mitigate or remediate its effects, or

(iii) failed to take prompt action to reduce the risk of committing similar offences in the future.

Absence of aggravating factor

(3) The absence of an aggravating factor set out in subsection (2) is not a mitigating factor.

Meaning of damage

(4) For the purposes of paragraphs (2)(a) to (c), damage includes loss of use value and non-use value.

Reasons

(5) If the court is satisfied of the existence of one or more of the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2) but decides not to increase the amount of the fine because of that factor, the court shall give reasons for that decision.

1997, c. 37, s. 212009, c. 14, s. 114

Sentencing principles

21.1 (1) In addition to the principles and factors that the court is otherwise required to consider, including those set out in sections 718.1 to 718.21 of the Criminal Code, the court shall consider the following principles when sentencing a person who is convicted of an offence under this Act:

- (a) the amount of the fine should be increased to account for every aggravating factor associated with the offence, including the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2); and
- (b) the amount of the fine should reflect the gravity of each aggravating factor associated with the offence.

Aggravating factors

(2) The aggravating factors are the following:

- (a) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to any park resources;
- (b) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to any unique, rare, particularly important or vulnerable park resources;
- (c) the damage caused by the offence is extensive, persistent or irreparable;
- (d) the offender committed the offence intentionally or recklessly;
- (e) the offender failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the commission of the offence despite having the financial means to do so;
- (f) by committing the offence or failing to take action to prevent its commission, the offender increased revenue or decreased costs or intended to increase revenue or decrease costs;
- (g) the offender committed the offence despite having been warned by the superintendent, a park warden or an enforcement officer of the circumstances that subsequently became the subject of the offence;
- (h) the offender has a history of non-compliance with federal or provincial legislation that relates to environmental or wildlife protection or conservation or the protection of cultural, historical or archaeological resources; and
- (i) after the commission of the offence, the offender
 - (i) attempted to conceal its commission,
 - (ii) failed to take prompt action to prevent, mitigate or remediate its effects, or
 - (iii) failed to take prompt action to reduce the risk of committing similar offences in the future.

Absence of aggravating factor

(3) The absence of an aggravating factor set out in subsection (2) is not a mitigating factor.

Meaning of damage

(4) For the purposes of paragraphs (2)(a) to (c), damage includes loss of use value and non-use value.

Reasons

(5) If the court is satisfied of the existence of one or more of the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2) but decides not to increase the amount of the fine because of that factor, the court shall give reasons for that decision.

Sentencing principles

22.08 (1) In addition to the principles and factors that the court is otherwise required to consider, including those set out in sections 718.1 to 718.21 of the Criminal Code, the court shall consider the following principles when sentencing a person who is convicted of an offence under this Act:

- (a) the amount of the fine should be increased to account for every aggravating factor associated with the offence, including the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2); and
- (b) the amount of the fine should reflect the gravity of each aggravating factor associated with the offence.

Aggravating factors

(2) The aggravating factors are the following:

- (a) the offence caused damage or risk of damage, directly or indirectly, to animals or plants;
- (b) the offence caused damage or risk of damage to a unique, rare, particularly important or vulnerable species of animal or plant or population of animals or plants;
- (c) the offender committed the offence intentionally or recklessly;
- (d) the offender profited, or intended to profit, by committing the offence;
- (e) the offender has a history of non-compliance with federal or provincial legislation that relates to environmental or wildlife conservation or protection; and
- (f) the offence involved a high degree of planning.

Absence of aggravating factor

(3) The absence of an aggravating factor set out in subsection (2) is not a mitigating factor.

Meaning of damage

(4) For the purposes of paragraphs (2)(a) and (b), damage includes loss of use value and non-use value.

Reasons

(5) If the court is satisfied of the existence of one or more of the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2) but decides not to increase the amount of the fine because of that factor, the court shall give reasons for that decision.

2009, c. 14, s. 122

Offences involving more than one animal or plant, etc.

22.09 If an offence under this Act involves more than one animal or plant, or part or derivative of an animal or plant, the fine to be imposed in respect of that offence may, despite sections 22 and 22.01, be the total of the fines that would have been imposed if each of the animals, plants, parts or derivatives had been the subject of a separate information.

2009, c. 14, s. 122

Continuing offence

22.1 If an offence under this Act is committed or continued on more than one day, it is deemed to be a separate offence for each day on which the offence is committed or continued.

2009, c. 14, s. 122

Application of fines

22.11 (1) All fines received by the Receiver General in respect of the commission of an offence under this Act, other than fines collected under the Contraventions Act, are to be credited to the Environmental Damages Fund, an account in the accounts of Canada, and used for purposes related to protecting, conserving or restoring the environment or for administering that Fund.

Recommendations of court

(2) The court imposing the fine may recommend to the Minister that all or a portion of the fine credited to the Environmental Damages Fund be paid to a person or an organization specified by the court for a purpose referred to in subsection (1).

2009, c. 14, s. 122

Orders of court

22.12 (1) If a person is convicted of an offence under this Act, in addition to any punishment imposed, the court may, having regard to the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, make an order containing one or more of the following prohibitions, directions or requirements:

- (a) prohibiting the person from doing any act or engaging in any activity that could, in the opinion of the court, result in the continuation or repetition of the offence;

- (k) requiring the person to surrender to the Minister any permit issued under this Act to the person; and
- (l) prohibiting the person from applying for any new permit under this Act during any period that the court considers appropriate.

Publication

(2) If a person fails to comply with an order made under paragraph (1)(c), the Minister may, in the manner that the court directed the person to do so, publish the facts relating to the commission of the offence and the details of the punishment imposed and recover the costs of publication from the offender.

Debt due to Her Majesty

(3) If the court makes an order under paragraph (1)(e) or (h) directing a person to pay an amount to Her Majesty in right of Canada, or if the Minister incurs publication costs under subsection (2), the amount or the costs, as the case may be, constitute a debt due to Her Majesty in right of Canada and may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Enforcement

(4) If the court makes an order under paragraph (1)(e) directing a person to pay an amount to another person, other than to Her Majesty in right of Canada, and the amount is not paid without delay, that other person may, by filing the order, enter as a judgment, in the superior court of the province in which the trial was held, the amount ordered to be paid, and that judgment is enforceable against the person who was directed to pay the amount in the same manner as if it were a judgment rendered against the offender in that court in civil proceedings.

Cancellation or suspension of permits

(5) If the court makes an order under paragraph (1)(k), any permit to which the order relates is cancelled unless the court makes an order suspending it for any period that the court considers appropriate.

Coming into force and duration of order

(6) An order made under subsection (1) comes into force on the day on which it is made or on any other day that the court may determine and shall not continue in force for more than three years after that day unless the court provides otherwise in the order.

Suspended sentence

22.13 If a person is convicted of an offence under this Act and the court suspends the passing of sentence pursuant to paragraph 731(1)(a) of the Criminal Code, the court may, in addition to any probation order made under that paragraph, make an order directing the person to comply with any prohibition, direction or requirement mentioned in section 22.12.

2009, c. 14, s. 122

Imposition of sentence

22.14 If a person whose sentence has been suspended fails to comply with an order made under 22.12 or is convicted, within three years after the day on which the order was made, of another offence under this Act, the court may, on the application of the prosecution, impose any sentence that could have been imposed if the passing of sentence had not been suspended.

2009, c. 14, s. 122

Limitation period

Regulations

241 The Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe the manner in which the proceeds or any part of the proceeds resulting from the payment of a fine or the execution of an order in relation to an offence under this Part must be distributed in order to reimburse any person, government or body that has commenced the proceedings in respect of the offence for costs incurred by that person, government or body in respect of the prosecution of the offence.

Liability of senior officers

242 (1) If an organization commits an offence under this Part, a senior officer of the organization who directed, authorized, assented to, acquiesced in or participated in the commission of the offence is a party to and guilty of the offence, and is liable on conviction to the penalty provided for by this Part for an individual in respect of the offence committed by the organization, whether or not the organization has been prosecuted.

Definition of senior officer

(2) In this section, senior officer means a director, partner, employee, member, agent, mandatary or contractor who plays an important role in the establishment of an organization's policies or is responsible for managing an important aspect of its activities and, in the case of a corporation, includes its chief executive officer and its chief financial officer.

Proof of offence

243 In any prosecution of an offence under this Part, other than an offence of contravening section 208 or subsection 225(4) or an offence under any of paragraphs 232(1)(b) and (e) to (g), it is sufficient proof of the offence to establish that it was committed by a director, partner, employee, member, agent, mandatary or contractor of the accused organization, whether or not they are identified or prosecuted for the offence.

Defence

244 A person must not be found guilty of an offence under this Part, other than an offence of contravening section 208 or subsection 225(4) or an offence under any of paragraphs 232(1)(b) and (e) to (g), if the person establishes that they exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

Certificate of analyst

245 (1) Subject to subsections (2) and (3), a certificate of an analyst that states the result of an analysis or examination and includes any related statement is admissible in evidence in any prosecution for an offence under this Part and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is proof of the statements contained in the certificate without proof of the signature or the official character of the person appearing to have signed the certificate.

Attendance of analyst

(2) The party against whom a certificate of an analyst is produced may, with leave of the court, require the attendance of the analyst for the purposes of cross-examination.

Notice

(3) A certificate of an analyst must not be received in evidence unless the party intending to produce it has given to the party against whom it is intended to be produced reasonable notice of that intention together with a copy of the certificate.

Regulations

246 The Governor in Council may, by regulation, designate provisions of regulations made under this Part for the purposes of paragraph 232(1)(c).

Sentencing

Fundamental purpose

247 The fundamental purpose of sentencing for offences under this Part is to contribute — in light of the risks posed by climate change to the environment, including its biological diversity, to human health and safety and to economic prosperity — to respect for laws related to the pricing of greenhouse gas emissions through the imposition of just sanctions that have as their objectives

- (a) the deterrence of the offender and any other person from committing offences under this Part;
- (b) the denunciation of the unlawful conduct; and
- (c) the reinforcement of the “polluter pays” principle.

Principles

248 (1) In addition to the principles and factors that the court is otherwise required to consider, including those set out in sections 718.1 to 718.21 of the Criminal Code, the court must consider the following principles when sentencing a person that is convicted of an offence under this Part:

- (a) the amount of the fine should be increased to account for every aggravating factor associated with the offence, including the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2); and
- (b) the amount of the fine should reflect the gravity of each aggravating factor associated with the offence.

Aggravating factors

(2) The aggravating factors are the following:

- (a) the offender committed the offence intentionally or recklessly;
- (b) the offender failed to take reasonable steps to prevent the commission of the offence despite having the financial means to do so;
- (c) by committing the offence or failing to take action to prevent its commission, the offender increased revenue or decreased costs or intended to increase revenue or decrease costs;
- (d) the offender committed the offence despite having been warned by an enforcement officer of the circumstances that subsequently became the subject of the offence;
- (e) the offender has a history of non-compliance with federal or provincial legislation that relates to the control or pricing of greenhouse gas emissions; and
- (f) after the commission of the offence, the offender
 - (i) attempted to conceal its commission,
 - (ii) failed to take prompt action to prevent, mitigate or remediate its effects, or

(iii) failed to take prompt action to reduce the risk of committing similar offences in the future.

Absence of aggravating factor

(3) The absence of an aggravating factor set out in subsection (2) is not a mitigating factor.

Reasons

(4) If the court is satisfied of the existence of one or more of the aggravating factors set out in subsection (2) but decides not to increase the amount of the fine because of that factor, the court must give reasons for that decision.

Orders of court

249 (1) If an offender has been convicted of an offence under this Part, in addition to any other punishment that may be imposed under this Part, the court may, having regard to the nature of the offence and the circumstances surrounding its commission, make an order having any or all of the following effects:

- (a) prohibiting the offender from doing any act or engaging in any activity that may result in the continuation or repetition of the offence;
- (b) directing the offender to implement a greenhouse gas emissions control or reduction system that meets a recognized Canadian or international standard;
- (c) directing the offender to have an audit conducted by a person of a class and at the times specified by the court and directing the offender to remedy any deficiencies revealed during the audit;
- (d) directing the offender to pay to Her Majesty in right of Canada an amount of money that the court considers appropriate for the purpose of promoting the control or reduction of greenhouse gas emissions or mitigating the effects of climate change caused by those emissions;
- (e) directing the offender to publish, in the manner specified by the court, the facts relating to the commission of the offence and the details of the punishment imposed, including any orders made under this subsection;
- (f) directing the offender to notify, at the offender's own cost and in the manner specified by the court, any person aggrieved or affected by the offender's conduct of the facts relating to the commission of the offence and of the details of the punishment imposed, including any orders made under this subsection;
- (g) directing the offender to post any bond or pay any amount of money into court that will ensure compliance with any order made under this section;
- (h) directing the offender to submit to the Minister, on application by the Minister made within three years after the date of conviction, any information with respect to the offender's activities that the court considers appropriate and just in the circumstances;
- (i) directing the offender to compensate any person, monetarily or otherwise, in whole or in part, for the cost of any remedial or preventive action taken, caused to be taken or to be taken as a result of the act or omission that constituted the offence, including costs of assessing appropriate remedial or preventive action;
- (j) directing the offender to perform community service, subject to any reasonable conditions that may be imposed in the order;

- (k) directing the offender to pay, in the manner prescribed by the court, an amount for the purpose of conducting research into climate change;
- (l) directing the offender to pay, in the manner prescribed by the court, an amount to groups concerned with climate change — including groups concerned with the effects of climate change on the Indigenous peoples of Canada and on northern, coastal or remote communities — to assist in their work;
- (m) directing the offender to pay, in the manner prescribed by the court, an amount to an educational institution including for scholarships for students enrolled in studies related to climate change;
- (n) requiring the offender to comply with any other conditions that the court considers appropriate in the circumstances for securing the offender’s good conduct and for deterring the offender and any other person from committing offences under this Part;
- (o) requiring the offender to remit compliance units to the Minister or any other person; and
- (p) prohibiting the offender from entering into transactions involving compliance units during any period that the court considers appropriate.

Publication

(2) If an offender fails to comply with an order made under paragraph (1)(e), the Minister may, in the manner that the court directed the offender to do so, publish the facts relating to the commission of the offence and the details of the punishment imposed and recover the costs of publication from the offender.

Debt due to Her Majesty

(3) If the court makes an order under paragraph (1)(d) or (i) directing an offender to pay an amount to Her Majesty in right of Canada, or if the Minister incurs publication costs under subsection (2), the amount or the costs, as the case may be, constitute a debt due to Her Majesty in right of Canada and may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Enforcement

(4) If the court makes an order under subsection (1) directing an offender to pay an amount to a person other than to Her Majesty in right of Canada and the amount is not paid without delay, the person may, by filing the order, enter as a judgment, in the superior court of the province in which the trial was held, the amount ordered to be paid, and that judgment is enforceable against the offender in the same manner as if it were a judgment rendered against the offender in that court in civil proceedings.

Retirement of compliance units

(5) If the court makes an order under paragraph (1)(o), any compliance unit that is remitted to the Minister in accordance with the order is retired from circulation.

Coming into force and duration

(6) An order made under subsection (1) comes into force on the day on which it is made or on any other day that the court may determine and must not continue in force for more than three years after that day unless the court provides otherwise in the order.

Suspended sentence

250 (1) If a person is convicted of an offence and the court suspends the passing of sentence under paragraph 731(1)(a) of the Criminal Code, the court may, in addition to any probation order made under that Act, make an order containing one or more of the prohibitions, directions or requirements referred to in subsection 249(1).

Imposition of sentence

(2) If the person does not comply with the order or is convicted of another offence within three years after the order is made, the court may, on the application of the prosecution, impose any sentence that could have been imposed if the passing of sentence had not been suspended.

Application of fines

251 (1) Subject to regulations made under section 241, all fines received by the Receiver General in respect of the commission of an offence under this Part or any amount received in accordance with an order under paragraph 249(1)(d) are to be credited to the Environmental Damages Fund, an account in the accounts of Canada, and used for purposes related to protecting, conserving or restoring the environment or for administering that Fund.

For greater certainty

(2) For greater certainty, purposes related to protecting, conserving or restoring the environment include promoting the control or reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

Recommendations of court

(3) A court imposing a fine may recommend to the Minister that all or a portion of the fine credited to the Environmental Damages Fund be paid to a person or an organization, including any entity that represents the interests of one or more of the Indigenous peoples of Canada, specified by the court for a purpose referred to in subsection (1).

RegistryPublication of information about contraventions

252 (1) For the purpose of encouraging compliance with this Part, the Minister must keep, in a registry accessible to the public, information about all convictions of organizations for offences under this Part.

Retention

(2) Information in the registry is to be kept for a minimum of five years.
