How to interpret the results

NOS responses are unweighted

It is unknown if the sample (newcomer client and non-client survey respondents) are representative of the total newcomer population since IRCC does not collect this data on all newcomers.

NOS should serve as a guide, not a plan

Additional data and stakeholders should be consulted before conclusions are made, and low cell counts - particularly % changes on small raw values - should be removed from analysis.

What is a client? A newcomer who received at least one domestic service from an IRCC-funded settlement service provider.

Variations in NOS Question Sets

Information from the GCMS and iCARE databases is used to ensure that respondents are asked relevant questions

Respondent Type	Resettled Refugees & Protected Persons	Other Immigration Categories
Clients of domestic settlement services	✓ Experiences resettling in Canada* ✓ Comparison of abilities at time of landing and when surveyed ✓ Whether IRCC-funded services helped improve these abilities ✓ Challenges in accessing IRCC-funded services	✓ Comparison of abilities at time of landing and when surveyed ✓ Whether IRCC-funded services helped improve these abilities ✓ Challenges in accessing IRCC-funded services
Non-clients of domestic settlement services	✓ Experiences resettling in Canada* ✓ Awareness of IRCC-funded services ✓ Comparison of abilities at time of landing and when surveyed	✓ Awareness of IRCC-funded services ✓ Comparison of abilities at time of landing and when surveyed

* Asked of those who became permanent residents in the most recent landing year in each survey wave. Resettled refugees were asked about the extent to which their needs were met in their first 6 weeks in Canada; protected persons were asked about their knowledge of how to get information or support when their asylum claim was accepted. Note that some non-clients of domestic services may have received pre-arrival services, and both clients and non-clients may have received non-IRCC-funded services.
