Appendix C

Medical Instructions

A medical examination is obligatory for you, your spouse or common-law partner and your dependent children, whether accompanying you to Canada or not. If you are a divorced or separated parent, a minor child of whom you have joint or sole custody is considered your dependent child, even if the child usually lives with the other parent and is not accompanying you to Canada.

Canadian immigration law defines as inadmissible to Canada a person who is suffering from any disease, disorder, disability or other health impairment as a result of the nature, severity or probable duration of which, in the opinion of a medical officer concurred with by at least one other medical officer, they are or are likely to be a danger to public health or to public safety, or their admission would cause or might reasonably be expected to cause excessive demands on health or social services. If your family member is inadmissible, you will be inadmissible also.

You will receive the forms and instructions for the medical examination, as well as the list of designated doctors in your country of residence, when a positive selection decision is made (usually at the time of the interview or when the decision is made to waive the interview). It is up to you to make an appointment with the doctor of your choice. You are also responsible for paying all the fees for the examination.

The permanent resident visa has the same validity as the medical results, that is, 12 months from the date of the first examination or test.
