

Canada Labour Code
Part II
Occupational Health and Safety

Richard Robillard
applicant

and

Securicor Canada Limited
employer

---

Decision No. 04-042
November 8, 2004

This case was decided by Pierre Rousseau, appeals officer.

- [1] On May 5th, 2003, Mr. Richard Robillard, employee of Securicor Canada Limited, as an armed guard, appealed the decision of no danger issued by health and safety officer Renée Roussel following his refusal to work. Mr. Robillard and coworker Jeff Koeliger refused to enter the shopping center, on the indication that they had previously tested the S-Series Remote Device and it did not work.
- [2] Based on the scant facts provided to me in this case, it appears that the Union decided not to make any representation on this file and will abide by the decision of the Appeals Officer concerning the previous cases already submitted to the Officer. On October 28 we received a fax signed by Mr. Robillard, mentioning that he had decided to withdraw his appeal.
- [3] Since the appeal has been withdrawn, I now confirm that the file on this matter is closed.

---

Pierre Rousseau
Appeals Officer

Summary of Decision

Decision No.: 04-042

Applicant: Richard Robillard

Employer: Securicor Canada Limited

Key Words: Decision, refusal to work, withdraw

Provisions: Code 129(7)
Regulations

Summary:

The applicant appealed a decision of no danger issued by a health and safety officer, following a refusal to work. The applicant decided to withdraw his appeal and to abide by the appeals officer decision considering that many other appeals on the same subject matter were already before the appeals officer.